There are no signature marks.

On the title-page is a colored illustration of the Bay of Naples; on page 41 is an illustration of the hotel wherein Wilde lived in Paris at the time the letters were written; on page 57 is a facsimile of a part of one of the letters; the cover-design in blue and yellow, and the four illustrations in blue on the end-papers and fly-leaves are from designs by Randolph Schwabe.

These letters are particularly interesting in that they trace the gradual evolution of the "Ballad of Reading Gaol." There are drafts of verses with the poet's comments on and reasons for the phraseology employed. This new volume of correspondence is printed as a supplement and as a continuation of the collection heretofore issued by the Beaumont Press, "After Reading."

AUREVILLY, BARBEY D'. [WILDE, OSCAR, Translator.]

What Never Dies || A Romance || By || Barbey D'Aurevilly ||
Translated Into English By || Sebastian Melmoth || (O.W.) ||
[Printer's ornament.] || Paris || Privately Printed || MCMII

CONDITION: 8°, three-quarters red levant morocco, gilt top, uncut, with original brown wrappers bound in. Size of leaf, 7½ by 5 inches.

FIRST EDITION.

COLLATION: Half-title, "What Never Dies," [A1] (verso "Edition limited to Five Hundred copies for Private Circulation only, amongst Friends and Subscribers"), pp. [1]-[2]; Title as above, in red and black, [A2] (verso blank), pp. [3]-[4]; "Foreword," [A3]-[A4], pp. 5-8; Text, "First Part," [A5]-[M6] (verso blank), pp. 9-[188]; Text, "Second Part," [M7]-[Y7] (recto), pp. 189-349; "Epilogue," [Y7] (verso)-[Z4], in eights, pp. 350-360.

This is a translation of Barbey d'Aurevilly's "Ce Qui ne Meurt Pas," made by Oscar Wilde while he was living in exile in Paris under the name of Sebastian Melmoth. This, judged from a critical point of view, is a mere piece of literary hackwork at best.

"Sebastian Melmoth" is the pseudonym assumed by Wilde after he went to France following his release from Reading Gaol. Lady Wilde was the grand-niece of the Reverend Charles Maturin, and of this kinship Oscar Wilde was very proud. Maturin's most famous novel was "Melmoth the Wanderer." Balzac was a great admirer of Maturin, and in turn Wilde greatly admired Balzac. In his "Life of Oscar Wilde," Sherard says: "When he left prison it was from the hero of this Charles Maturin's most famous novel, 'Melmoth the Wanderer,' that he borrowed the name under which he was to drag out the remaining agony of his years."

CONDITION: 8°, gray cloth boards, with pictorial design in colors, gilt top, uncut. Size of leaf, 7 by $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

COLLATION: Two preliminary blank leaves; Half-title, "The Canterville Ghost," one leaf (verso blank), pp. [i]-[ii]; Title as above, with ornamental initial letter within double ruled lines, one leaf (verso blank), pp. [iii]-[iv]; List of illustrations, one leaf, pp. v-vi; Text, pp. 1-[124]; Advertisements, one leaf, without pagination; Three blank leaves at end.

There are no signature marks.

Each chapter begins with an ornamental initial letter, and throughout the text are numerous full-page illustrations and small woodcuts as called for in the list of illustrations.

This story appeared first in the "Court & Society Review," Vol. IV,

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

Nos. 138-139, Feb. 23, and Mar. 2, 1887. It was subsequently included in "Lord Arthur Savile's Crime & Other Stories," 1891.

WILDE, OSCAR.

The Century || Guild || Hobby Horse || London. || Kegan Paul, Trench And Co: || 1, Paternoster Square. || Volume I. 1886.

CONDITION: Seven volumes, 4°, full green polished calf, gilt, red label on back, gilt top, uncut. Size of leaf, 12 by 9 inches.

FIRST EDITION.

COLLATION: [Volume I, No. 3. July], 1886. Facsimile of Keats's sonnet, p. [81]; "Keats' Sonnet On Blue," signed "Oscar Wilde," pp. 83-86.

Volumes II-VII contain no contributions by Wilde.

This publication, began in Jan., 1886, was issued quarterly, and ceased at the end of Vol. VII, in 1892. A preliminary number was issued at Orpington by A. H. Mackmurdo in April, 1884, and three numbers of a new series entitled "The Hobby Horse," edited by H. P. Horne, appeared in 1893.

In No. 4, October, 1886, Wilde's article on Chatterton is announced as being unavoidably detained until the January number. It would seem that the article never appeared in print.

"Keats' Sonnet On Blue" was reprinted without the facsimile, in Miscellanies, 1908, pages 73-76.

Inserted is an autograph letter from T. Martin, the sometime warder of Reading Gaol, to Robert Ross, in which the writer requests that Ross will review a story and use his influence in procuring a publisher.

Wilde's letter, written from France, dated May 27, 1897, to the editor of the "Daily Chronicle," appeared in the issue of that paper May 28, 1897.

The "Daily Chronicle" was selected by him as the medium for publishing this letter probably because, through the offices of a warder, he was able to see copies of this periodical during part of his imprisonment. Though Oscar Wilde in his "Soul of Man" decried against anything that savored of altruism, yet how changed we find him after two years passed in abject misery in prison, suffering under the terrible ordeal of his punishment; we perceive in him a deeper emotional being, whom humiliation has converted from callousness to heartfelt pity for others and in whom a desire to alleviate the condition of those more miserable than he has developed.

In this letter to the "Daily Chronicle," published May 28, 1897, we see the character of the man thus transformed. Warder Martin of Reading Prison had been dismissed for giving some sweet biscuits to a hungry child. This letter is a terrific arraignment of the prison system of England and of the punishment that was wont to be inflicted on children of tender years.

He preferred to give this letter to the press to obtain for it as large a publicity as possible in order to arouse public opinion for prison reform. No doubt he could easily have found a publisher who would gladly have paid him handsomely for the letter. But philanthropy, not gain, was the motive that prompted him.

A second letter on prison life, written from Paris to the editor of the same journal, was published March 24, 1898, entitled "Don't Read This If You Want To Be Happy Today."

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

Most of the reforms proposed by Wilde in these letters have been adopted since in the Prison Acts of 1898.

WILDE, OSCAR.

Collected Works. [1908.]

CONDITION: Fourteen volumes, 8°, full limp vellum with designs in gilt by Charles Ricketts on front-cover, gilt top, uncut. Size of leaf, 8 1/8 by 5 3/4 inches.

FIRST COLLECTED EDITION, second issue.

COLLATION: The description agrees with the preceding set in every respect except that on the verso of each title-page the statement of limited edition reads: "This Edition on Japanese vellum is limited to 80 copies for the United Kingdom and America." In volume X, "The House Of Pomegranates," the first half-sheet [a] is wrongly folded, so that the first half-title, "A House Of Pomegranates The Happy Prince And Other Tales," appears on the fourth leaf, and the second half-title, "A House Of Pomegranates," on the first leaf. This discrepancy appears to exist in all copies.

De Profundis || By || Oscar Wilde || Methuen And Co. || 36 Essex Street, Strand || London [1905.]

CONDITION: 8°, blue buckram boards, with design by Charles Ricketts, and lettering stamped in gilt on front-cover, gilt top, uncut. Size of leaf, 7½ by 5 inches.

FIRST EDITION, first issue.

COLLATION: Half-title, "De Profundis," [A1] (verso blank), pp. [i]-[ii]; Title as above, [A2] (verso "First published in 1905" and copyright notice), pp. [iii]-[iv]; "Preface" by Robert Ross, [A3]-[A5] (verso blank), pp. v-[x]; Text, [A6]-[K4] (verso blank), ending with imprint, in eights, pp. 11-[152]; Catalogue of books published by Methuen and Co., dated March, 1905, twenty leaves, pp. [1]-40.

An authorized translation in German by Dr. Max Meyerfeld appeared in "Die Neue Rundschau," Berlin, in January and February, 1905, before the English version was issued.

"De Profundis," "that last infirmity of noble mind," was written by Oscar Wilde in the solitude of his cell while confined in Reading Gaol, and principally at night when, alone with his own thoughts, he could review the tragic events of his fateful career. Written in the purest of English, of which he was the conscious master, it is an "Apologia pro vita sua." And yet beyond this it is more—much more. It is the last great cry of a tortured soul bent low by its own unhappy errors, and despondent within its dreadful environment. It is less of a protest against the judgment of society than it is an expression of his wonderment, that he, the consummate artist could thus be judged.

The original manuscript, it is stated, is in the form of a letter to a friend, who though unnamed is admitted to have been Lord Alfred Douglas. The manuscript passed into the keeping of Mr. Robert Ross, who was Wilde's literary executor. He seems to have given much reflection to the matter of its publication, for it was not until 1905 that any portion of it appeared in print. That portion is a masterful selection, made after profound study by Mr. Ross, and is what we now know as "De Profundis."

The manuscript as it came from the hands of Wilde, is written on twenty sheets (eighty pages) of blue foolscap paper, ruled with thirty-three blue lines to each page. The first leaf of each sheet bears at the top the plain embossed seal of the government. Each sheet measures thirteen by eight inches. It was given to Ross, by Wilde, the day after his release from prison.

In 1909, the original manuscript was sealed up and given by Mr. Ross to the British Museum, and by the trustees it was accepted to remain intact until 1960.

There are three full-page illustrations by Walter Crane, each printed on rice paper, once in black, and again in brown, each mounted. The illustrations are followed by a blank leaf. The small head-pieces, which are printed in black on rice paper and mounted, and the tail-pieces and ornaments, are by Jacomb Hood.

Portions of the text of two of these stories have been set to incidental music by Liza Lehmann (Mrs. Herbert Bedford), and published by Chappell & Co., Ltd., 50 New Bond Street, London—namely, "The Happy Prince," 1908, and "The Selfish Giant," 1911.

Almost unanimously the critics agree that these stories are Wilde's best and most characteristic prose work, rich in imagination and adorned with strange and exotic words in the use of which Oscar Wilde delighted. As a matter of fact, before his name became an anathema in England these fairy tales were read with keenest delight by the children of Great Britain, for their wondrously beautiful stories alone, which could, despite the richness of the vocabulary, readily interest the mind of a child. There are no fairy tales in the English language comparable with them; they are written in a style attuned to that of Hans Christian Anderson, with the imagination of Flaubert, not uninfluenced by Baudelaire.

Underlying these stories, and those in "A House of Pomegranates" as well, is a theme that makes them also of interest to the mature mind—a subtle philosophy carrying an indictment of the existing social system, which Wilde further developed in the "Soul of Man." His sincerity regarding his attitude has been questioned, which indeed might naturally be due to the fact that Wilde was the poseur par excellence of his time.

CONDITION: Small 4°, cream linen boards, with design in red and design stamped with gold on front-cover, green linen back with lettering and design in gilt, uncut. The Frederick H. Evans copy, with bookplate. Size of leaf, 8 $\frac{1}{4}$ by 6 $\frac{3}{4}$ inches.

FIRST EDITION.

COLLATION: Preliminary blank leaf, A1; Dedication, "To Constance Mary Wilde," A2(rectoblank); Woodcut title-page, designed by C. Ricketts, [A3](verso imprint, publisher's device, and copyright notice); "Contents," [A4](verso blank); Text, "The Yovng King," B1-E1, pp. 1-26; Text, "The Birthday Of The Infanta," [E2]-[I3](verso blank), pp. 27-[62]; Text, "The Fisherman And His Sovl," [I4]-[R4], pp. 63-128; Text, "The Star-Child," S1-[X3], in fours, pp. 129-[158]; Printer's device and imprint, [X4](verso blank), one leaf without pagination.

There are four full-page illustrations by C. H. Shannon, and facing each plate is an inserted leaf, having on the verso a small design by C. Ricketts, who also designed the pictorial title-page, the end-papers, the covers, and the decorations.

The four plates were printed by some new process, which was not a success, the reproduction being very faint; this was probably due to some chemical impurity in the ink.

The volume was not a success and, in 1903 or 1904, the unsold copies were disposed of for a few shillings.

1000 copies of this edition were printed.

As soon as this volume was issued the appearance of the book was attacked in "The Speaker" of November 28th, 1891, page 648, to which attack Wilde replied vigorously, defending its format. The literary merit of the book, it is curious to say, was not criticised, except in the "Pall Mall Gazette" (Dec. 11, 1891, page 2), wherein the question was asked whether the book had been written for the purpose of giving pleasure to the British child. Wilde, thereupon replied to this "silly question," that the book had been written without any such intent; just as Hans Christian Anderson had written his fairy stories to please himself. All of this is set out in Mason's bibliography.

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

Here again we find Wilde at his best in the opulence of imagination and in richness of vocabulary. Wilde was still inspired with the joy and beauty of life, despite the fact that sinister rumors concerning him were even then being circulated.

preserved, viz: his first lecture delivered in New York on January 9, 1882, on the "English Renaissance."

The two poems, "Le Jardin" and "La Mer," that are printed in his pamphlet appeared originally in the first number of "Our Continent," an American magazine, in February, 1882. Until their reappearance in this form in 1906, they had not been reprinted nor are they included in any edition of the collected poems.

Of Masks A note on illusion," [P₄](verso blank), pp. [215]-[216]; Text, [P₅]-S₁, in eights, pp. [217]-258; Imprint, [S₂](verso blank), one leaf without pagination.

Of this edition 1500 copies were printed.

"The Decay of Lying" first appeared in "The Nineteenth Century," January, 1889; "Pen, Pencil and Poison" in "The Fortnightly Review," January, 1889; "The Critic as Artist," Part I, in "The Nineteenth Century," July, 1890, under the title "The True Function and Value of Criticism"; "The Critic as Artist," Part II in "The Nineteenth Century," in September, 1890; and "The Truth of Masks" in "The Nineteenth Century," in May, 1885, under the title "Shakespeare and Stage Costume."

All the essays vary considerably from the text as they originally appeared in magazine form. "The Decay of Lying" is a dialogue and the two persons concerned in it are named Cyril and Vivian [Vyvyan] the names of Wilde's two sons, born respectively in 1885 and 1886. Vyvyan is still living under the name of Vyvyan Holland, he being the present administrator of his father's estates and effects.

"The Critic as Artist" is also in dialogue form in two parts.

"Pen, Pencil and Poison" is an interesting study in biography—a psychological analysis of the character of that interesting artist, man of letters, and arch criminal, Thomas Wainewright, friend of Charles Lamb and his literary contemporaries.

The last essay, "Shakespeare and Stage Costume," gives us an idea of Wilde's knowledge of the theater.

Somewhere in "De Profundis," Wilde said: "What paradox was to me in the sphere of thought, perversity became to me in the realm of passion." So indeed did paradox play havoc with him in his writings as truly as ever perversity killed his soul. The paradox, the inverted truth, pervades Wilde's "Intentions" so completely that, by its sheer brilliancy, it distracts the reader's thought and attention from the intellectual and serious strain that underlies these unusual essays. Pollard has said: "Paradox and moods, it is always these in the case of Wilde. And never more so than in the case of his essays. Here in Intentions are the most precious utterances of the amateur in art and life. . . . Jewels of wit and paradox are in these pages scattered so profusely, that if once one start to pick them up, one may not stop, save for sheer weariness." The essays are, perhaps, too over-ornamented; they are pregnant with conceit and impertinences. It would be interesting to really know what in them Wilde seriously believed, and how much the ideas expressed in them were uttered for the mere joy of playing with the intelligence of his readers.

The essays, however, have a distinct literary flavor. They strike a pure and beautiful lyrical note in prose which but few if any of his contemporaries have ever succeeded in attaining. They are among Wilde's greatest achievements as a writer.

Of this edition 2000 copies were printed.

These stories all appeared first in magazine form, as follows:

(1.) "Lord Arthur Savile's Crime" (a study of duty), in "The Court and Society Review," May 11, 18, and 25, 1887;

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

- (2.) "The Sphinx without a Secret" (an etching), in "The World," May 25, 1887 ("Lady Alroy");
- (3.) "The Canterville Ghost" (a hylo-idealistic romance), in "The Court and Society Review," February 23 and March 2, 1887;
- (4.) "The Model Millionaire" (a note of admiration), in "The World," June 22, 1887.

It is interesting to note that the "Atheneum," which heretofore had always censured Wilde's works, in a review of these short stories, received them with some flattering praise. Such stories as these were no effort for Wilde to compose. In conversation with his friends it was his wont to spin yarn after yarn in an off-handed manner to their great delight. But such writing did not please Wilde—it was entirely too tame for him. The tales are written in a light vein and in a spirit of comedy; they are mere "pot-boilers" and not intended to convey a message, but written merely to amuse. They deserve no serious attention from the student of Wilde.

Ransome says: "'Lord Arthur Savile's Crime,' however, is not only remarkable as an indication of what Wilde was to do both as a dramatist and as a story-teller, but is itself a delightful piece of buffoonery."

This story first appeared simultaneously in London and New York, in "Lippincott's Monthly Magazine," for July, 1890. As first published it had no preface, and consisted of thirteen chapters only. Wilde, later, wrote a preface which appeared in the "Fortnightly Review" for March, 1891. On July 1, 1891, Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. brought out the novel in book form (see following item), with an altered preface and with an addition of seven chapters, to meet the requirements of the publishers who insisted that the length of the manuscript as originally written did not reach the tare exacted by the trade for goods of a like kind. The preface, as it originally appeared in the "Fortnightly Review," consisted of twenty-three aphorisms; but published with the first edition in book form, the ninth aphorism was divided into two and an additional one was inserted after the twelfth. The added chapters are those dealing with Sybil's home and the death of her brother.

This was the first and only novel written by Oscar Wilde. He had prophesied that its appearance would create a sensation, and it certainly did so. He studiously ignored the Victorian novel form, upon which the reading public had been fed, and with which, indeed, it was surfeited. His departure into new paths of literature has deeply influenced English and foreign letters, and modern works show that influence both directly and indirectly.

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

This work was written to order, at the request of the author's publishers. Wilde was at the time somewhat in financial difficulties. Like all works written in similar circumstances, the romance suffered in consequence; its plot is well conceived, but the entire story lacks the inspiration and the spontaneity of a novel written without the whip and spur of subservience to financial necessity.

"Dorian Gray," indeed, was not a failure, but it undoubtedly would have been a greater creation had its writer been free from the outward compulsion that brought it to life.

By critics and artists it was received with great praise. Walter Pater, that master of style and consummate genius of prose writing, considered that Wilde, in "Dorian Gray," reached the highest point of perfection; in summing up the work he deemed it worthy to be classed with the tales of Edgar Allan Poe. Anna H. Wharton and Julian Hawthorne reviewed the novel in "Lippincott's Magazine," for September, 1890. There were innumerable others that hailed the appearance of "Dorian Gray" and lauded the author for his departure from the common idiom of the time.

It is quite probable that the idea of the story was suggested by Balzac's "Peau de Chagrin." Poe, Huysman, and Stevenson all lent something in the way of suggestion and atmosphere. Yet the work in toto remains essentially Wilde's own handiwork; it is sui generis in the field of literary endeavor and is not easily approachable. Arthur Ransome calls it "the first French novel to be written in the English language." The decorative scheme is possibly carried to an extreme in the employment of unusually colored words to describe and to delineate the enacted scenes and their surroundings.

With great art and subtle analysis, like a skilful surgeon, the author lays bare and dissects the soul of a Hedonist, one bent upon acquiring by personal experience a knowledge of all conceivable forms of pleasure, and he shows the effect that such self-abandonment to Cyrenaic life and to vice must have on the character of one at one time possessed of lofty ideals and inherited instincts. The whole is a wonderful psychological study; and though denied a moral by many, the moral is there nevertheless, and is persistent without any undue effort toward emphasizing it. But a story such as this one is open to many interpretations, depending largely upon the æstheticism of the reader.

The press, however, assailed it stupidly, yet unmercifully. Wilde's preface was written in answer to the assailants of the morality of the story in its first form. A seemingly unending controversy ensued, pro and con, and Wilde contributed a number of letters to the press defending his work, and this correspondence shedding light on his attitude toward his art is very illuminating as it emphasizes and amplifies most considerably the aphorisms contained in his preface.

One is led to wonder sometimes if the tale is not somewhat autobiographical; if in fact Wilde does not approximate himself to Dorian Gray and to Lord Henry Wotton; in the one's inverted attitude toward life, and in the other's hard, cold, but always studied cynicism regarding morality in general. A pity it is that Wilde could not have given the world another novel written under different circumstances, in which his genius as a prose writer might have had a wider range, and in circumstances which might have afforded his fertile brain and fluent pen a larger canvas upon which to spread the variegated colors of his intellectual palette.

In this edition appears the preface signed "Basil Hallward," which is the name of the artist in the novel. It has been supposed that this name veiled the identity of some artist then contemporary and living. Research has failed to disclose such facts, and by those who might perhaps know, it is generally conceded that the character is a fictitious conception.

There are three manuscript leaves on which are written in Wilde's autograph phrases similar to those published in the book, three of which have been included in the work.

This copy does not agree with any of those collated by Mason in his bibliography, namely Nos. 599-602. It has no full stop after the date on the title-page, but page 3 is not numbered on the inside margin, but has been corrected.

These aphorisms were first published in the "Chameléon," Volume I, No. 1, December, 1894. Later pirated editions contained additional aphorisms, and the text of some of those first published in the "Chameleon" shows numerous variations. The contribution to the "Chameleon" was made at the request of a friend when that magazine was about to be launched on its career. He had, however, written these paradoxes sometime previously, and had intended them for the "Saturday Review." In the same volume of the "Chameleon" there appeared a story entitled "The Priest and the Acolyte," a degenerate piece of writing, inexcusable from any standpoint. There also appeared two poems by Lord Alfred Douglas which created quite a sensation. Wilde was not a personal friend of the publisher nor of the editor of the "Chameleon" and was in nowise responsible for the matter that appeared therein.

Mr. Justice Charles, in summing up the evidence in the first trial of Oscar Wilde on May 1, 1895, after referring to the evidence given by Wilde at the Queensberry trial, which had been called the "literary" part of the case, said in substance that it had been attempted to show by cross-examination of Wilde, that in a magazine called the "Chameleon" he had given the sanction of his name to the most abominable doctrines, but that the only connection that had been proved between that magazine and Wilde, was that it had been prefaced by the "Phrases and Philosophies for Use of the Young," of which it is sufficient to say that some were amusing, some cynical, and some silly; but wicked—no, not wicked in the sense of the wickedness which it was sought to bring home to Wilde. That to impute to Wilde anything else that appeared in the “Chameleon” was absurd; and to judge him by the works of another man he had never seen was absurd and unjust.

The text is taken and reprinted from the essay as it first appeared in "Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine," July, 1889.

This edition is limited to 425 copies on Japanese vellum, and was printed at the press of George D. Loring, Portland, Maine.

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

The first page of the text has an ornamental head-piece.

This essay first appeared in an abridged form in "Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine," for July, 1889. That the subject of the story was to have been fully developed is evidenced by the announcement by Messrs. Mathews and Lane, in 1894, of the publication of "The Incomparable and Ingenious history of Mr. W.H., being the true secret of Shakespeare's Sonnets now for the first time here fully set forth." It was not at that time given to the world. On the day of Wilde's arrest, April 5, 1895, the manuscript together with a copy of "Blackwood's Magazine," with marginal alterations and inserted pages, is said to have been returned to Wilde's house in Tite Street, Chelsea, but to have mysteriously disappeared. It was eventually found and was printed in its enlarged form, from the original manuscript, by Mitchell Kennerley, New York, in May, 1921, twenty-six years after its disappearance (see infra).

This is Wilde's best work in fiction although the fiction itself is only of relative importance. It is rather an apologue which serves as a medium for the exposition and the development of a theory concerning a controversy of many years' standing, regarding the identity of the mysterious "W. H.," to whom the sonnets are dedicated.

The sonnets were first issued in book form in 1609 by a piratical bookseller, Thomas Thorpe by name, who prefixed to the edition the following dedication: "To The Onlie Begetter Of These Insuing Sonnets, Mr. W. H. All Happiness And That Eternitie Promised By Our Ever-Living Poet Wisheth Thee Well-Wishing Adventurer In Setting Forth. T. T."

The assumption has been that W. H. was the person to whom the sonnets were addressed. Some authorities have concluded that this person was Henry Wrothsbey, Earl of Southampton, known patron of Shakespeare, the initials being reversed; others that William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, was the person meant. Sidney Lee declares that the dedication by Thorpe has nothing to do with the inspirer of the poet, but that W. H. is meant to be a certain William Hall, a literary intermediary or procuror of copy for publishers of the time, and calls attention to the fact that Thorpe had at least, once before, dedicated a work to its "better."

The theory in the epilogue is discussed and developed by the narrator (Wilde) and two other men, one of whom the originator, unable to convince Erskine, his friend, of the probability of the theory, causes a portrait of W. H. to be painted after the manner of François Clouet, and thereby wins Erskine to a belief in the genuineness of his discovery. When Erskine later detects the forgery he confronts his friend with the fact, whereupon his friend commits suicide. The narrator, much impressed with the story, starts out upon an independent investigation. He first disposes of the claims of Southampton and Pembroke, then he assumes that "W. H." stands for the name of Will Hughes and declares him to have been the boy actor for whom Shakespeare wrote the parts of Viola, Imogen, Juliet, Rosamond, Portia, Desdemona, and Cleopatra. The identity of the person, he obtains from the eighth line of sonnet twenty, "A man in hew, all Hews in his controwling," and points out that, in the original edition of the sonnet, "Hews" is printed with a capital letter and in Italics. The Christian name he found in sonnets numbers one hundred thirty-five and one hundred forty-three. He deduces from the other sonnets many circumstantial details that might be most convincing if the hypothesis upon which the theory is based were proof-sound. Here is the fatal point upon which the theory must fall for he pre-supposes the real existence of a person whose existence is itself the subject of the dispute. Butler, in his "Shakespeare's Sonnets" (1889), says: "But no William Hughes can be identified with Mr. W. H. unless, inter alia, we can date his birth as having taken place in 1567 or 1568; and though we know of many William Hughes's contemporaries of Shakespeare, there is none except the well-known Bishop of St. Asaph, the year of whose birth we can even approximately ascertain. This prelate is out of the question; for he was between 35 and 40 in 1585, and whatever else Mr W. H. can have been we cannot suppose him to have been a Bishop.

"As regards other William Hughes's, seven are mentioned in 'Notes and Queries' (5th Series, V, page 443) not one of them suggesting probable identity with Mr. W. H."

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

The theory is not original with Wilde; it was first suggested by Tyrwhitt (also in Malone's edition of 1780) on the basis of Italicised "Hews" of sonnet twenty.

Wilde, from the sonnets, deduces the history of this Will Hughes; how Shakespeare appeals to him to marry, not flesh and blood, but "Marriage with his Muse" (Sonnet LXXXII). All the early sonnets invite Hughes to go upon the stage and to become a player in order to impersonate the characters that the poet might create; they warn him not to waste his youth and beauty but while these are still his, to devote them to the interpretation of his plays that he might thereby gain immortal fame; Wilde also investigates and endeavors to prove by the sonnets, the abandonment of Shakespeare's theater by Hughes for that of a rival dramatist. Chapman, Marlowe, Watson, and others have been suggested as that rival. Wilde inclines to Marlowe. Also he delves into the identity of the "dark woman," who, after having bewitched the poet, casts her spell over Willie Hughes and estranges the two.

The dénouement follows. The narrator, having thoroughly convinced himself of the soundness of the theory, writes to Erskine urging him to publish the same to the world. No sooner has he sent the letter than doubt enters his soul. By endeavoring to proselytize the unbelieving Erskine he has ruined his own conviction as to the truth of the theory of which he had become the earnest advocate. Ransome says: "It was a favorite idea of Wilde's, and the motive of La Sainte Courtisane, that to slough off a belief like a snake skin, one has only to convert someone else to it."

The entire story is a veritable tour de force, an essay on criticism, cleverly and ingeniously worked out. It shows Wilde to have been a deep student of the sonnets and of the work of contemporary writers.

The original manuscript of this essay is one of the many that disappeared at the time of the sale of Wilde's effects at Tite Street, Chelsea, on April 24, 1895. It was taken to America and privately published in New York, the edition stated to be limited to 225 copies. Part of it was published in Methuen's First Collected Edition of Wilde's works (1908), Volume VII, page 223. On the reverse of the half-title, Robert Ross has a bibliographical note reading as follows: "For establishing the authenticity of this Essay I am indebted to Mr. Charles Glidder Osborne, who has examined the original manuscript, now in America. The Essay has been pirated by some person or persons unknown. It is obviously a very early work, written when the author was either at Dublin or at Oxford. I am indebted to a well-known Oxford Scholar [Professor J. W. Mackail] for correcting the proofs as far as is possible. The interpretation of the Essay is sometimes obscure."

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

The rest of the essay, after discoveries made by Mr. Ross, was included in "Miscellanies," Volume XIV, of the first collected edition of Me-thuen & Co. (1908).

This essay was written for the Chancellor's English Essay Prize at Oxford in 1879, the subject being "Historical Criticism Among the Ancients." The prize was not awarded. This had happened only once previously in 1871. The prize was founded in 1768.

Professor J. W. Mackail, Professor of Poetry at Oxford, who acted as one of the judges of this prize, states: "The essay, young as it is, is quite up to the general level of that sort of thing and I do not know why the prize was not awarded."

There are head- and tail-pieces in red or black and the work is rubricated throughout.

Between the half-title and the title is the following slip: "Important Notice. The present translation was done direct from the original Latin by 'Sebastian Melmoth' (Oscar Wilde)."

In none of the bibliographies consulted is to be found the translation of this work attributed to Wilde or to Sebastian Melmoth, his pseudonym. In the critical works on Wilde and in the biographies one finds no mention of this work except in "Oscar Wilde A Sketch with Notices of Some of His Books," by Willis Vickery (1906), but as noted elsewhere this writer is most unreliable. If this is a piece of Wilde's work, which is doubtful, it was a mere piece of hack translation that went to occupy his time after his release from prison, and after he had finished his great poem, "The Ballad of Reading Gaol."

But in Mason's bibliography, page 350, No. 336, in a note to "The Picture of Dorian Gray," Paris, Charles Carrington (1909), we read: "The last two leaves form part of the last sheet (sig. V). Between the last leaf of the text and these leaves is inserted a leaf of coloured paper, on the front of which, printed in dark blue, is a note headed 'Nota Bene,' to the effect that the publisher no longer offers translations of The Satyricon of Petronius and What Never Dies, from the French of Barbey d' Aureilly, as being the work of 'Sebastian Melmoth' or Oscar Wilde."

This work was published by "Wright and Jones," and probably printed at the Riverside Press Ltd., Edinburgh. Mr. Mason in his bibliography cites a copy in Mr. Walter Ledger's collection bearing on the title-page the names of Wright and Jones and also the stamp of the Riverside Press, with the words "First Proof." This edition follows the text which appeared in "The Fortnightly Review," February, 1891. This essay first appeared in "The Fortnightly Review," for February, 1891, under the title of "The Soul of Man Under Socialism." It was published in book form in 1895 under the title of "The Soul of Man." It has been translated into many tongues and undoubtedly has had some influence on the minds of men. It is the final development of those philosophical views which he entertained toward existing social conditions and which he first touched upon in his "House of Pomegranates" and his "Happy Prince and Other Tales." In it he encourages the individualistic note in art which he contends cannot be attained under any other form of government than that of socialism. But what he advocates is not socialism at all, but as Huneker in his "Unicorns" has put it, "a philosophical anarchism." Wilde says in his essay, that "the form of government that is most suitable to the artist is no government at all."

That part of the essay is the best which deals not with political theories, but with the attitude of the artist toward the influences of public opinion. Wilde objects to "public opinion dictating to the artist the form he is to use, the mode in which he is to use it, and the materials with which he is to work." A reading of this essay leaves one with the impression that Wilde is not in the least sincere. For all his rantings against the social conditions of the period he offers no serious remedy. One is convinced that Wilde is attitudinizing and playing a new rôle, not for the purpose of winning others to a point of view in which he believes, but merely to astound the public and invite controversial replies.

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

Temple Scott calls the essay the "highest expression in prose." But Wilde herein does not show to best advantage as a prose writer, though the essay may be said to be brilliant in conception. As mere literature it will add nothing to his fame.

Fifteen copies were printed to secure the American copyright.

The manuscript is in the British Museum and heretofore had never been published. The text consists of those portions of the original manuscript not included in Methuen's edition of 1909.

On the verso of the fly-leaf of this copy, entirely in the handwriting of Robert Ross, and signed by him, is the following note:

"A few weeks after the Ransome case I was privately informed by American agents, that Alfred Douglas was offering the unpublished portion of De Profundis for publication in America. He had been supplied with a copy during discovery of Documents in the Ransome case. In order to secure the rights in America, I had 15 copies printed, two being deposited in Library of Congress Washington in accordance with the American copyright Act. The remaining thirteen (of which this is one) are in my possession.

"Douglas was meanwhile commencing action against Methuen (afterwards abandoned) for recovery of receipts of the published book and also against the Trustees of the British Museum for recovery of MS.
(action also abandoned). In his bankruptcy proceedings Douglas declared the copyright & MS of De Profundis as one of his assets.

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

“Long before the publication of De Profundis in 1905, I had taken counsel’s opinion as to ownership of copyright. It was declared that I was the sole owner and this was recognized by the Wildes official receivers.

“Douglas has no claim because the MS never passed into his possession. He received a copy of it in Wilde’s lifetime the 9 August 1897. But he denied this in the Ransome case. I can prove his perjury by his own letters to me & Sir George Lewis & the independent evidence of common friends.”

On the title-page is another note by Ross in pencil as follows: “N. B. This has been uncorrected: being printed off from a typewritten scrip.”

On page 36, in pencil, Ross has amplified the note regarding the amount of the Queensberry’s costs which forced Wilde into bankruptcy: “The £700 was entirely paid with 4% interest when Wilde’s bankruptcy was annulled in 1906. Alfred Douglas actually received one quarter of this amount which was an asset in his father’s estate.”

This, so-called “The Suppressed Portion of De Profundis,” is the portion which was rejected by Mr. Ross when he most skilfully edited that part of the manuscript, which in 1905 appeared in print. The suppression was both judicious and justifiable, although not for reasons as commonly defined by the public. Contrary to popular belief, there is in this portion of the work nothing whatever of a scandalous nature. If it be the truth, it is a most bitter, scathing, and blistering arraignment of man’s shameless ingratitude and calloused indifference. If it be but a fictional obsession which gnawed into the unhappy soul of the writer, it further accentuates the depths into which this once proud spirit had descended, and but emphasizes the misery it must have endured. It were well that these two portions of “De Profundis” should have been printed individually and read apart.

This portion of the original manuscript was placed in the custody of the British Museum in 1909, to be held intact until 1960. In the libel action of Douglas vs. Ransome, the manuscript, at the mandate of authority was evoked from the British Museum and brought into the High Court of Justice (King’s Bench Division), where on April 17 and 18, 1913, certain parts were read during the hearing. These were published in some of the daily papers of London, on April 18 and 19. Later in the same year the entire manuscript was published by Robert Ross, but under what circumstances or for what reason, is not clearly known.

"Speranza" was the nom de plume of Jane Francesca Wilde, the mother of Oscar Wilde, which she signed to all her poems; but for her published letters and prose works she used the pseudonym "John Fenshaw Ellis."

She began contributing to "The Nation" about 1845, and it was her anonymous article, "Jacta Alea Est," which appeared in No. 304 of that magazine, dated July 29, 1848, which, together with other articles in the same number, caused "The Nation" to be suppressed and the entire edition of No. 304 to be confiscated, and its publisher, Sir Charles Duffy, to be brought to trial for sedition.

Sherard, in his "Life Of Oscar Wilde" (1906), page 79, erroneously states that the "Poems by Speranza" were published in 1871.

After her marriage in 1851, Lady Wilde abandoned poetry and the Young Irish Movement in which she had shown so great an interest, and confined her writings to prose.

Throughout the text are numerous small woodcut illustrations, and at the end of the volume is a folding map of Lough Corrib, 1867.

On the fly-leaf is the autographic inscription, "Hubert Smith Esq from Francesca Speranza (Lady Wilde)."

Sir William Wilde, father of Oscar Wilde, was born in Castlerea in 1815. He received his early education at the Royal School, Banagher. As a lad he was wont to pass much of his time in fishing and in exploring the country, thus coming into contact with the Irish people and hearing at first hand the recitals of fairy tales and legends, which he used to good account later on in his "Irish Popular Superstitions." He early developed a taste for antiquarian research, visiting many places of interest in the vicinity of Castlerea, and he made visits also to the plain of Rutheragan, the site of the palace and of the cemetery of the western chieftains. He thus became intimately acquainted with the legends of the castles in this district and was impressed with the superstitions and the curious ceremonies of the various festivals, all of which he later embodied in his works.

He began his professional studies in 1832 and continued them afterwards in London, Berlin, and Vienna, and in 1841 started the practice of medicine as an oculist and otologist. He became a skilful and resourceful surgeon of considerable renown. As he was of a very charitable nature he devoted much of his earnings to and was thereby mainly instrumental in the founding of the St. Mark's Ophthalmic Hospital, later amalgamated with the National Eye and Ear Infirmary, now known as The Royal Victoria Eye and Ear Infirmary. In 1853, he was appointed

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

Surgeon-Oculist-in-Ordinary to the Queen, and in 1864 knighthood was conferred upon him. In 1851, he was married to Jane Francesca Elgee, who was well known in literary circles in Dublin, writing under the pseudonyms of "Speranza" and "John Fenshaw Ellis."

Though a great surgeon, successful in the world of letters, kind-hearted and charitable to a degree, Sir William's moral reputation was none too good. He was possessed of such strong passions that at times these overmastered him to the detriment of his professional dignity and his conjugal happiness. He died in 1876.

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

The preface states that: "The Memoir of Gabriel Beranger, by the late Sir William Wilde, was originally written for the 'Journal of the Royal Archæological Association of Ireland.' The first portion appeared in January, 1871, and was continued through a few subsequent numbers; but Sir William Wilde being then much occupied by the Irish census for 1871, the work was interrupted and not resumed until July, 1875, when he promised that the memoirs should be continued without further delay. This promise unhappily, was never fulfilled; for soon after all literary work had to be suspended, in consequence of Sir William's failing health and last fatal illness, which was terminated by his death in April, 1876.

"The Memoir being thus left unfinished, Lady Wilde, at the request of the Editor, undertook its completion; and the concluding and final portion contributed by her appeared in the October number of the 'Archæological Journal,' for 1876."

On the verso of the fly-leaf appears in Oscar Wilde's handwriting the following: "to M^{rs} Spottiswoode, in memory of many charming days spent at Combe York, from Oscar Wilde July 20-1880."

Robert H. Sherard, a journalist of Paris, wrote this book after he had known Oscar Wilde for sixteen years or more. In point of time this is the first biography written of Wilde, but there its importance ceases. It was written by one obsessed with the unfortunate impression that Wilde's tragedy was of more vital interest to the world than the more important incidents in his public and private life which might shed light on his literary and dramatic output. Many matters of deep interest have been entirely untouched. These have been pointed out by Mr. Percival Pollard in his "Their Day In Court" (1909). He says: "The Sherard 'Life' will rank behind all the others. For there will, of course, be many others." And again he says: "The most one could say of that 'Life of Oscar Wilde' was that it was first in the field."

SHERARD, ROBERT HARBOROUGH.

The Real || Oscar Wilde || By || Robert Harborough Sherard ||
Author of "The Life of Oscar Wilde" || With Numerous Unpublished || Letters, Facsimiles, Por- || traits And Illustrations ||

The Library of William Andrews Clark, Jr.

[Printer's ornament.] || Philadelphia || David McKay, Publisher || 604-8 South Washington Square [n. d.]

CONDITION: 8°, gray boards, vellum back with design and lettering in gilt, uncut. Size of leaf, $8\frac{3}{4}$ by $5\frac{5}{8}$ inches.

COLLATION: Half-title, "The Real Oscar Wilde," one leaf (verso blank), pp. [i]-[ii]; Title as above, one leaf (verso note and "Printed in Great Britain"), pp. [iii]-[iv]; Dedication, "To E. D. K.," one leaf (verso blank), pp. [v]-[vi]; "Foreword," one leaf, pp. vii-viii; "Contents," three leaves, pp. ix-xiv; "List Of Illustrations," one leaf, pp. xv-xvi; Text, A1-[Z8] and 2A1-[2D4], in eights, pp. 1-424; "Index," [2D5]-[2D8] (verso imprint), pp. 425-[432].

The frontispiece, "Oscar," is a colored cartoon by "Ape," which appeared in "Vanity Fair," May 24, 1884.

Throughout the text are numerous illustrations, portraits, and facsimiles.

This work was written by Mr. Sherard after his first biography, "The Life of Oscar Wilde" (1906), had been reviewed by Dr. Ernest Bendz in an essay, entitled "The Influence of Pater and Mathew Arnold in the Prose-Writings," wherein this reviewer says: "His great life of Oscar Wilde, though it may not quite satisfy us on all points, still remains our chief source of information concerning the external facts of the poet's life." Mr. Sherard in his "Foreword" to this volume says that he is prompted to write this present work by the criticism of Dr. Bendz. This book is certainly a better one than his first effort and meets many of the objections that were raised by Mr. Pollard in "Their Day in Court" (1909).

CONDITION: 8°, green canvas boards, with design and lettering stamped in gilt, vellum back, gilt top, uncut. Size of leaf, 9 $\frac{7}{8}$ by 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

FIRST EDITION.

COLLATION: Half-title, "Oscar Wilde," [sig. 1₁] (verso "In Preparation After The Fault"), pp. [1]-[2]; Title as above, in red and black, [sig. 1₂] (verso blank), pp. [3]-[4]; Dedication, "To R. R.," [sig. 1₃] (verso blank), pp. [5]-[6]; "List Of Illustrations," [sig. 1₄] (verso "Prefatory Note," dated August 7, 1902), pp. [7]-[8]; Text, [sig. 1₅]-[sig. 17₅] (recto), pp. 9-265; "Appendix From the Gaulois of Dec., 17th, 1891," signed by Robert H. Sherard, [sig. 17₅] (verso)-[sig. 18₃], ending with imprint, in eights, pp. 266-[278]; Advertisement, [sig. 18₄], one leaf without pagination.

There are six portraits of Oscar Wilde, taken at different dates, and two facsimile letters, distributed throughout the work as called for by the list of illustrations.

This was the first biography of Wilde to be written and published. Sherard was a journalist of Paris, who had known Wilde about sixteen years. Pollard in his "Their Day In Court" (1909), says: "In this volume he inflicted all the errors of taste and attitude that were possible."

In a foot-note to the "Foreword," which Mr. Sherard has written for his book entitled "The Real Oscar Wilde" (n. d.), he says: "My Life of Oscar Wilde, published in 1906 by Mr. Werner Laurie, had, it is true, been preceded in 1902 by a brochure entitled: 'The Story of an Unhappy Friendship.' But this book, which was privately printed, was, in no sense of the word, a biography. My subject was subjectively treated; it was a description of Wilde 'seen through a temperament,' my own. The Werner Laurie book was my first book on Wilde—the present work is the second."

It is plain from this that Sherard himself placed little value on the work above described.

Vol. II, Nos. II-III, contain no contributions by Wilde.

In Vol. II, No. IV, Dec. 6, 1892, page 97, is published a sonnet, "The New Remorse," by Oscar Wilde.

Vol. III, No. I, contains no contributions by Wilde.

In Vol. III, No. II, February 17, 1893, pages 52-53, is published "The House Of Judgment," by Oscar Wilde. The line, "Edited by Lord Alfred Douglas," appears on the cover-title after the list of contents.

Vol. III, No. III, contains no contributions by Wilde.

Vol. IV. No. I. May, 1893. || The || Spirit Lamp. || An Aesthetic, Literary and Critical || Magazine, || Edited By || Lord Alfred Douglas. || Contents: || [Titles of contents.] || Oxford: James Thornton, 33 & 41, High Street. || One Shilling.

CONDITION: Vol. IV, Nos. I-II [two parts], 4°, gray wrappers printed in black, stitched, uncut.

In Vol. IV, No. I, is inserted a circular from the publishers announcing that in the future the "Spirit Lamp" would appear monthly in an enlarged and improved form.

Vol. IV, No. I, contains no contributions by Wilde, but there appears therein a sonnet by Pierre Louÿs which is a paraphrase of "a letter written in prose poetry by Mr. Oscar Wilde to a friend and translated into rhymed poetry by a poet of no importance." The letter which is thus paraphrased is one written by Oscar Wilde to Lord Alfred Douglas which was offered as an exhibit and read into the testimony of the trial of Lord Queensberry at the Old Bailey.

In Vol. IV, No. II, June 6, 1893, pages 49-50, appears "The Disciple," by Oscar Wilde.

All numbers appearing after Vol. II, No. I, were edited by Lord Alfred Douglas. Some copies of Vol. II, No. I, have "Second Edition" on the front wrapper, which was described by the publisher as being "one of Wason's little pleasantries." Only one impression was actually printed.

Both before and after his lecturing tours in America, Wilde was a frequent visitor at Whistler's studio in Chelsea. He was an ardent admirer of the painter, not alone for his work as an artist but also for his interesting personality, Whistler being a versatile and brilliant conversationalist. In 1883, Whistler outlined a lecture for Wilde which the latter delivered to the Royal Academy students. In 1885, Whistler appeared himself for the first time as a lecturer, and on that occasion reappropriated some of the material he had previously suggested to Wilde. "That," says Mr. Ransome, "is the origin of the accusation, so often made, that Wilde built a reputation on borrowed bons mots." Then ensued the "acrimonious correspondence" printed in this brochure. In 1889, Wilde's "Decay of Lying" appeared, in which he used the phrase "the courage of the opinion of others" which had been the sting of Whistler's sarcasm; letters on both sides may be read in Whistler's "The Art of Making Enemies."

James Huneker in "Unicorns" (1917), says: "The best thing that Whistler ever said to Wilde was his claiming in advance as his own anything Oscar might utter; and here Whistler was himself borrowing an epigram of Baudelaire, as he borrowed from the same source and amplified the idea that nature is monotonous, nature is a plagiarist from art, and all the rest of such paradoxical chatter and inconsequent humour. . . . Whistler discoursed wittily, waspishly, but was n't knee-high to a grasshopper when confronted with Wilde."

Mr. Ross has pointed out that all of Wilde's best work was written after his break with Whistler.

According to Mason this work was published by Leonard Smithers. The text of “An Acrimonious Correspondence” is taken from Whistler’s “Gentle Art Of Making Enemies” (Heinemann), 1890, pages 161-165 and 236-243.

Copies in dark brown wrappers were issued later.

This is a strong defense of Wilde in answer to his detractors who charged that his love of beauty was a pose, that his books were immoral, that his influence on his friends was bad, and that his life was vicious. To all of these charges, except the last, the author has made a case that is difficult to refute. It had been better had the writer said nothing to the last charge, other than that, “as he was convicted (rightly or wrongly, it makes no difference) of breaking a law, he is being punished for breaking a law.” The “Apologia” was written in March, 1895, and one must admire the strength of character of a man who, in the face of overwhelming public opinion against Wilde, could so manfully stand up for his convictions, regardless if one agrees with the conclusions arrived at by the writer or not.

There are three portraits of Oscar Wilde, three of the author, and two facsimile letters as called for in the list of illustrations.

On pages 29-36 is a review of "De Profundis." The statement at the top of page 30, "I had read most of the pages in manuscript four years ago," is inaccurate, as Mason states, for the manuscript was given to Robert Ross by Wilde the day after he was released from prison. Ross then placed it in the British Museum.

The facsimiles of letters on pages 6-7 and page 38, as also the inscription on the frontispiece, according to Mason, are forgeries.

The collation of the above copy does not agree in pagination with that in Mason's bibliography.
